PREFACE TO HISTORICAL NOTES

These charts cover 1200 years of human history. Some races, such as the Chinese and the Hebrews have kept genealogical records as a matter of course, but it has been a matter of practice among Anglo-Saxon to do it only for important people. This does not give any of us the right to be unduly proud, however. Let us look at the facts: Everyone has two parents, 4 grand-parents, 8 greats, and so on. By the end of 20 generations this becomes a good sized city-- each one of us has 1,048,576 ancestors. As a generation is counted as about 33 years, this great number is achieved in 600 years. Another 600 years, to cover this chart, would show an astounding figure, probably larger than the entire population of Western Europe and Britain at that time. The answer is, of course, that with intermarriages and many children, we are all descended from the same people--a different mixture, of course; but, good, bad, or indifferent, we are all from the same stock.

Times were savage in the early days, so many men who, tho wise and capable, were at the same time crafty and cruel. Charlemagne himself, though the greatest ruler of early Europe, did not hesitate to behead those who refused to be baptized.

In 1075, a revolt of Norman knights broke out, and Waltheof, one of the few surviving Saxon knights, joined them. William The Conqueror hurried back from Normandy and put down the insurrection, but he let the Norman knights go, and beheaded Waltheof (who was one of our early ancestors) See I. 1b.

Even in the days of the Pilgrim Fathers, persecution had made the leaders, stern and unbending. John Oldham was the leader of a group of ten adventurers who arrived on the ANNE, and immediately started trouble . The old chronicle states that John was forced to run the gauntlet between a line of soldiers to a waiting boat on the shore and each of them gave him " a bob upon the bumme" and a "thump on ye brich", and bade him "go & mende his manners." He came back several times, but finally went to Block Island where an Indian killed him, and thus was brought on the Pequot War. (He was also our ancestor, since his daughter married Jonathan Brewster, son of Elder Brewster !' (I. 3a)

As most of you know, the harsh rule of King John, and his heavy demands upon the barons finally forced them to band together to find away toward a more democratic government. At the high altar of the Norman Abbey of Bury, Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury gathered the barons and swore to force the King to sign the Magna Charta. This he did, though John could not write his name, so had to make his mark. Later, Bishop Langton refused to obey the Pope's command to excommunicate the barons who signed the charter.

Magna Charta Barons who are ancestors of most of the people named on these charts (except husbands and wives, unless they have come down on other lines.) All of these on Chart I.

William de Albini Meschines, Lord of Belvoir
Roger Bigod, 2d Earl of Norfolk
Hugh Bigod, 3rd Earl of Norfolk; Earl of Pembroks (after WM. Marshall's death
* William the Marshall, Earl of Pembroke; Regent for King Henry III. during his minority
Robert de Roos, 4th Lord of Hamlake

* The lapse of time being so great, it is not surprising that there are differences of opinion regarding certain lines of descent. This is so regarding William Marshall. Some authorities claim that Maud, his daughter, (Chart I. 4g) had no children at all by her husband, Hugh Bigot (Adams & Weis). Browning says she had 5 sons and 5 daughters; but the sons had no children. Wurts says she had children. Wm. Chauncy Fowler in his Chauncy Memorials has her name in the line of descent. Sir. Winston Churchill, in The Birth of Britain speaks of a son of John Marshall.

I have accepted the records of those who believed she had children, chiefly because her children are credited with inheriting offices, which, as I understand the old English law, could be inherited only through her; e.g. Marshall of England, which went to her son Roger, and was returned to the Crown by the 5th Earl of Norfolk, her grandson.

DESCENT FROM THE CAESARS

This is to be found in Wurts, Vol. VIII., p. 2530. It seems to be too inclusive of historical names to be credible, so I give it to you with no guarantees:

Chauncy de Chauncy was one of Wm. the Conqueror's band, who invaded Britain in 1066. The Chauncy Line was easy to follow, because from 1066 until 1592 the family had moved only once. They held the estates as hereditary barons of Skirpenbeck in Yorkshire on the Derwent from 1066 to 1399, when by consent of the king, the estates were alienated. They then purchased the estate of Gedleston or Newplace, in Hertfordshire and Pishobury.

Dr. Charles Chauncy, Second President of Harvard, educated in Trinity College, Cambridge, Eng., came to America in 1636. He was highly educated; (See Latin and Greek poems and essays he wrote.-- Chauncy Memorials). Because he was a man of great piety --and greater determination, he was always in trouble. He was persecuted for opposing a "Book of Sports" which permitted Sunday games after church, and was cast into prison in England for opposing changes in the Communion.

In New England, in his first pastorate, he raised a controversy by insisting that children must be baptized by complete immersion, not by sprinkling, and that it should be done at night. He took another charge with the same result. He finally decided to return to England where his university would employ him.

But Dr. Dunster, first President of Harvard had died, and the trustees, knowing of Dr. Chauncy's scholarship, decided that the question of infant baptism would not arise in a college, so they offered him the position of President of Harvard, 1654, at 100 pounds a year, on condition that he no longer published his tenets regarding infant baptism.

Of him and Dr. Dunster was said that both were able, faithful and earnest; both learned beyond the measure of their contemporaries, and probably in this respect never surpassed in that office.

Dr. Chauncy's chief difficulty was financial. He had ten children and could not have managed without his small income from an estate in England. There are letters extant to the Fathers of the Massachusetts Commonwealth. One complained:"The allotment of Indian corn was uasd to pay debts, as well as 100 pounds of your petitioners own estate. There is no ground belonging to the President to keep cattle upon, so that neither milk, butter, or cheese can be had but by the penny." But the fathers did not loosen the purse-strings. These details were revealed by a succeeding President, Dr. Quincy, who said:" Dr. Dunster and Dr. Chauncy exceeded every one of their successors in suffering, sacrifice and privations, yet they were the main support of Harvard for 30 years when its friends were the fewest."

Through Elizabeth Ely, who married Samuel Goodrich, all of the people named on Chart II, as descendants of Samuel Goodrich; all on Chart III, descended from Emily Chauncy Goodrich Mead; and all the people on Charts IV. (except for adoption), Chart V. and Charts VI. and VII, except for spouses, of course,-- are descended from Dr. John Ely, a physician in Saybrook, Conn., whose hospital had been burned by the British. So he volunteered to fight for the colonies, and enlisted his own company. In 1777 he was Commander at Fort Trumbull with the rank of Colonel. He and his company were captured in the Battle of Long Island, and were prisoners for three years. Col. Ely refused an officers' exchange because his men were ill, and he was their only doctor. He spent his own funds on their behalf, and it was not until long after his death that his family was partially reimbursed by an Act of Congress.

There are also many descendants from Revolutionary soldiers among the men and women who have married into the family. The Livingston family on these charts are descended from Gen. William Livingston, who was also Governor of New Jersey; also from his son, Col. William, who was an aide to his father. Dr. George H. Crowl and his children are descended from Captain Robert Wilson, of Scottish descent, b. 1752 in York, Pa; with the 77th Pennsylvania; wounded Paoli, 1777; d. Jan. 24, 1834

Dr. William H. Vickers (Ch. V.) was Great-grandson of Senator Vickers, who was said to have crossed from Western Maryland on an ice-sled to save Pres. Johnson from impeachment. He and his children are descendants from Revolutionary soldiers. They live in a 145 year old house near Niagara Falls, from which the first gun of the Battle of Queenstown was fired.

Mr. Donald Garfield Valentine (Ch. VII.) is a descendant of Francis Cooke and Myles Standish of the Mayflower. Two sons by his first wife: Donald Stuart; b. Oct 31, 1929; m. Mildred Rafferty; 1 son, Bruce, b. July 11, 1949. (2) Kenneth Brace, b. Apr. 23, 1922; 1 son, Ashby Philip, b. Nov. 19, 1960. (Donald Valentine now married to Emily Moulton (Ch.VII.).no children.

Hazel H. Reed, wife of Henry E. Reed (Ch. VI) is descended from a private in the Essex Co. Militia in the Revolution. He belonged to the family of Martha Washington. His name, Uzal Ball

Major Daniel Ely was an officer in the French and Indian War. He was married , Nov. 10, 1736 and died March 14, 1776. He was the father of Col. John Ely of the Revolution. Ch.I. 5b)

Col. Elihu Chauncy was with the Northern Army in the French and Indian War. He was elected for 29 years to represent Durham, Conn. in the State Legislature, and in the early part of the Revolution was one of a committee trying persons suspected of being Tories. He was the eldest son of Rev. Nathaniel of Durham, and was born Mar. 24, 1810; m. Mary Griswold; d. Apr. 10, 1791 (Chart II. 2a)

MEAD (continued)

The Mead homestead on upper Lake Avenue in Greenwich, Connecticut, has been standing since pre-Revolutionary times. During the Revolution a number of British soldiers came to the door and demanded food. Grandmother Mead (Ruth Lyon) was alone in the house with the younger children, but she picked up her broom and barred their way, announcing that they had done too much damage to her family already and would get no food in her house. They threatened her with their bayonets, but evidently respected her bravery, for they thrust their bayonets into the wall of the room, and when she did not yield, they pulled them out and went away. Those bayonet holes were still there when, as a child of seven, I was taken to the house, and they impressed me mightily. Unfortunately a will was circumvented and the person who acquired the property sold it immediately. It is still standing, and has become a beautiful estate.

WARNER

Lucien Birdseye Warner, who married Helen Mead, was of English birth and parentage. His father, on the death of the child's mother, took him to Brooklyn, N. Y, where he put hin in charge of two aunts. He then returned to England. The boy's name at that time was Martin Van Buren Warner. The aunts evidently did not like the President of that name, so they re-named him after a Brooklyn Judge, Lucien Birdseye. Years passed. The boy grew up, married and was near retirement. One day his wife saw an advertisement in the Brooklyn paper asking for the whereabouts of Martin van Buren Warner. Mystified, they answered the ad. They discovered that all the relatives in England had died, and there was a legacy. But they were not interested in Lucien Warner. All witnesses were dead; what to do ! Suddenly the wife remembered a small book that Martin had earned for memory work in Sunday School more than 50 years before. They finally found it, inscribed to Martin Van Buren Warner, and a generous legacy was turned over to them.

The Warner family is now widely scattered, most of them in California. See Chart VII.

THE LIVINGSTONS

The Livingstons, Jays, and Schuylers were all related by descent from the Earls of Livingston and Callender. There is a rhyme that puts a Livingston among the Maids of Honor of Mary, Queen of Scots--"Mary Seaton, Mary Beaton, Mary Livingston, and me." The Livingstons came to America in 1674 with a grant from King George I. for extensive estates on the Hudson River, and soon became wealthy and powerful Barons. Their attempts to enlarge their holdings from the State of Vermont is related by Dorothy Canfield Fisher, in " The Vermont Tradition". Sarah Livingston married John Jay, Chief Justice. The oath of office was administered to George Washington by Chancellor Robert Livingston (a cousin, not in direct line.)

The Van Voorhies family, one of whom married a Livingston, (Chart IV.), were among the early settlers of New York City, (then New Amsterdam). They also have a long distinguished history. THE VICKERS

The name Vickers is frequently found in the annals of ancient Sheffield, England. The name is associated with the colonial days of the Province of Maryland and has been identified with the Eastern Shore since 1730. Several generations of Vickers lived in Massachusetts before the settlement of Maryland. James Savage in his Genealogical Dictionary of the first settlers of New England, tracing 3 generations who arrived before 1692, and one Vickers who was in New Haven in 1670; died, 1684.

Arm- Argent, a fret gules; Crest- Cubit arm ppr; vest gules holding millrind azure; motto: Vigore

Gen. George Vickers was admitted to the bar of Kent in 1832, and in 1836 was one of 21 Whig members of the Senatorial College.

THE GOODRICH FAMILY

The Goodrich family is noted for the long line of Christian ministers which it produced, many of them professors in Yale, and two who nearly became President of Yale. One was elected and declined; another tied with Dr. Styles and withdrew in his favor. During the Revolution some of these professors were cited for their assistance in recruiting.

The family is very old. According to the Domesday Book, compiled in Saxon England about 991 A.D., Godric was a landed proprietor. In the reign of King Stephen, 1135-1154, William, and William Fitz-William Godric lived in Yorkshire. Those in America were noted for literary ability and poetry, as well as their high personal standards.

Browning, Strothers, ANDERSON Dabney, Dulaney

Through the above lines, Woodford Dulaney Anderson 's ancestry has been traced through Norman and Saxon lines to William the Conqueror and to the Saxon kings, through Edward I. His sister, Jennie Anderson Brown spent a lifetime in tracing many branches of the family. The records are voluminous. The present writer hopes to be able to organize them for publication. Revolutionary ancestry of Woodford D. Anderson and his descendants: Captain John Dabney Strothers, b. 1721; d. April, 1795; m. Mary Willis Wade. Captain John Browning, b. April 16, 1749; d. Sept.25, 1813; m. Elizabeth Strothers. (Probably Virginians, since the Brownings settled in Culpepper Co. Va.

The father of W. D. Anderson is reputed to have been descended from Chief Justice of the U. S., John Marshall. His name was William Samuel Marshall Anderson, of Snow Hill, Md.

There is a story told of the name Dulaney, for which I do not vouch. It is said that an early king of France had a hostler, who in a crisis, saved his life. The hostler was thereupon dubbed Duke du l'on, or Duke of the asses--which name became Dulaney.

MEAD

The Meads came from England after 1630 and settled coastal Connecticut, together with Knapps, Closes, and Husted. Of the seven patentees who founded the town of Greenwich, the descendants of Emily Chauncy Goodrich Mead are descended from five. The Meads were very prolific--19 children was not uncommon. They intermarried closely, used Bible names for their children, and were for many years men of the soil. During the Revolution, Abram Mead, (Chart III. 5d) had 13 children. His two oldest were in their teens, but they went to war, also the husband of the eldest daughter. Abram stayed home to feed the other 10 and the Revolutionary soldiers. All three of the soldiers were killed. I have a poignant memorial to these youths, written at the time of their death.

When the British brought the Hessian Soldiers over to help them fight the American colonists a large number of German families came over and settled in the area of Lancaster, Pa. These have been known for generations as the "Pennsylvania Dutch". Some of them are descendants of the Hessian soldiers. They are known for their upright behavior, their thrift, and their cooking.

Rev. Harry G. Romig, the father of Arthur M. Romig, D.D. (Chart V.) who married Adelaide Helen Anderson, was one of these. He met his wife, Lucy Alexander, at Park College, Mo., and they went together to the mission field in China.

Lucy Alexander was of pioneer stock who were early settlers of Texas. Her mother, left with small children because of early widowhood, organized the first school in the Panhandle, and had a large part in the development of the country. Many of her descendants are still there. Two sons and a daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Harry Romig have seen service on the mission field, one son is a doctor, and another a college professor.

Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Romig (Helen Anderson) were in China for ten years as missionaries. Just before Pearl Harbor, the U. S. government ordered all mothers with families out of China, so Helen and three children took the next to the last boat to America. On the day of Pearl Harbor, there was a Japanese soldier on every doorstep of a foreigner. Arthur and his parents were interned, one in central China and the other two in North China. There was no word from them for well over a year, and no one knew whether they were alive. Then came the negotiations, and finally the Gripsholm , with all three on board ! At the present writing, Dr. Romig is Presbytery Executive of the City of Washington, D. C., and his sister Ruth Bolton has had to be evacuated from Africa, with her children. Her husband, Eric Bolton (a relative of the Livingstons) has gone back to the Congo area.

FAMILY NOTES

Descent from Odin, through the Royal Line of the Sigambri, and Charlemagne

The trend of human history, so far back as can be ascertained, indicates that man first appeared in Asia, and migrated from there in tribal groups to the rest of the world.

The Eddas of Denmark and Norway, the early Greek and Roman writers--and even Ezekiel and Zephaniah in the Bible,--mention these hordes of migrating people; so that current students of man's wanderings can probe with some degree of accuracy.

A branch of the Kimmerians (Cimbri) was driven from their home in Scythia (Ukraine) in 634 B.C. by the Getae (Goths). Odin, their leader, later deified by the Danes, guided the tribe westward through many vicissitudes, until they reached Jutland (the Danish Peninsula), in 603 B.C. Odin had four sons. Skjoldr succeeded Odin; Baldur became king of the Angles; Vedeg and Sigge settled along the North Sea and the tribes coalesced. Vedeg's line apparently terminated shortly. The tribe took the name of Sigambri (from Sigge), and became the ruling dynasty. Later they were called Merovingians from one of their kings. In 431 A.D., Clodio, the earliest known king, defeated the Roman General Aetius, and ruled to the Somme River. He died in 447.

Merowich ruled to 457

Childerith; 457-481. His grave was discovered in1653 in Hainault, Belgium. His son was --

Clovis, born 466, ruled, 481-511.; m. St. Chlotilde of Germany.

Clovis was an ancestor of Charlemagne

Note: There was a Kimmerian tribe known as CHAUCI. No further information about it as yet--but it is interesting to wonder !
